The program allows you to change the settings of your photos, using a password to access them. You can protect your albums with various password options: • One password for each album. • Same password for every photo in an album. • Same password for every album. This tool is actually not as complicated as it may seem, since there is no password generator to help you remember your options. To begin working with the application, you must select the items you'd like to organize in an album: • The name of the album. • The folder where the album will be saved. • The quality of the album. • The password for the album. The first time you launch the application, you'll be asked to set a master password. Since it's not easy to remember, we'll go over the different options that are presented. When you're finished, you can use the password to protect your albums, before it's deleted. As we said, once you've created a new album, you can go ahead and set its password. The application offers you four options, as follows: • Change password for album. • Same password for album photos. • Same password for all photos in the album. • Don't change password. When you select the first option, you'll be prompted for the name of the album. When you've written it down, a password is automatically generated. You'll be prompted for the new password before creating the album. You'll be able to keep the old password if you wish, but it will be deleted. We'll go ahead and select the second option, which is setting the same password for all photos in the album. As we said, it's easy to remember

The use of analgesics in the last month of life was studied in a sample of 99 patients on the palliative care service at a university-based hospital. The average age of these patients was 69 years, and only 30% had received a full pain-treatment plan before death. In general, women reported a higher average level of pain (p less than 0.05) and less pain control (p less than 0.01) than men. Women also received fewer doses of narcotics than men, and it was related to age. These results suggest that few older cancer patients receive adequate pain management in the last month of life. Interventions to improve pain control in older cancer patients should focus on educating patients and families to request pain medication.
